Note that this is kinda outdated now. In 5.1.0 onward, "npm install" does not read from the package-lock.json file at all. It just installs from package.json like it used to. To make use of the package-lock.json file, you have to use the new "npm ci" command, which will install the exact versions listed in package-lock.json instead of the version-ranges given in package.json.

@hippietrail We use sweater in the UK for a heavy, knitted garment with long sleeves, we also use pullover, but usually for one a bit lighter. A jumper in the UK can be used generally for a sweater, pullover or sweatshirt. Of course we need all of these things more than you do! By the way a windcheater in the UK is a windproof jacket usually with a zip and an elasticated welt.

In the US, there are two different types of garment that can be called a jumper. For adult women (and older girls), it is the over-dress described by the other commenters; however, it can also be a garment for babies and toddlers, in which case it's more of an all-purpose term for anything that includes both a top and bottom, all in one piece, like pinafores, rompers, jon-jons, etc. (but ...
